Does Not Characterize the Proceedings of Two Canadian Skippers Because They Are British Subjects, but It Thereby Leaves a Large Blank in Its Report.

Shortly after the wreck of the steamer Valencia, which went down at the entrance to Puget Sound on January 27 last, the President appointed a commission to look into the matter and report on the responsibility for the loss of life. It will be remembered that out of 173 passengers and members of the crew 133 were lost, and that certain actions of those sent out to rescue the stranded vessel "certainly dis-played no heroism." This is the language of the commission, whose report is now in.

In brief, the Valencia was lost in a deep fog off Vancouver Island. The captain had lost his reckoning and, upon turning in to enter the Sound, as he supposed, struck first a rock upon which his vessel hung until she had been lightened, and then, when he attempted to beach her, he backed up against a line of cliffs. This happened at midnight. For about two days the vessel hung there, through various misfortunes, with wrecked lifeboats and passengers spilled into the sea; and then finally she broke up, drowning most of the survivors, who had been clinging to the rigging and the upper works. On the last day four vessels, two American and two Canadian, stood within speaking distance; but for various reasons, mainly, doubtless, the absence of a Capt. Casto, no boat was sent to the Valencia and no launching was attemped.

The whole tale, in fact, is an appalling series of "ifs." If some of the telegraph lines had not been down several oceangoing tugs lying at Neahbay, twenty miles from the scene of the wreck, might have been notified and sent on. If the captain of the steamer Queen had thought he might have turned aside on his way down the coast and with the loss of an hour or two notified these tugs, which would have done effective work. If the captain of the Queen hadn't been cautious he might have dared launch a lifeboat instead of waiting for the sea to go down. At the time of the final breaking up two little liferafts not only lived in that sea, but managed to shoot the breakers. When the steamer Topeka arrived the two captains, after a consultation, decided to send the Queen back, "as she was not needed." But after a consultation, decided to send the Queen back, "as she was not needed." But the Queen knew where the wreck was, while the Topeka lost the bearings almost at once. And when the weather cleared there was no wreck in sight, for the Valencia had gone to pieces. Then there were two Canadian steamers which hove to within sight of the wreck. Their captains took a look and reported to the Americans that there were no survivors on that wreck; whereupon they went on toward British Columbia. At that time nearly 100 men, women and children were crowded on the superstructure, cheered by the sight of ships lying by to rescue them.

Most heartrending circumstance of all; the remaining hundred might have been saved had not nine of the survivors turned to the right rather than to the left. For these men had made it through the breakers on one of the lifeboats which survived the first attempt at launching. Had they on one of the lifeboats which survived the first attempt at launching. Had they ravelled along the cliffs which ran above the Valencia they might have seen their chance to catch a line from the line firing gun which she carried. There were nine of them, enough to have established connection for the breeches buoy, and the distance from the topmasts to the top of the cliffs was not more than 250 feet. They did not turn that way and when, later in the day, the Valencia shot her line in desperation, there was no one on shore to make the day, the valencia shot her line in desperation, there was no one on shore to make it fast, the nine men having travelled on to reach a telegraph wire.

These are only a few of the strange circumstances which conspired to make what might have been a minor wreck a world horror. The commission goes into all these these in its recommendations. these things in its recommendations.

In the first place, it finds that Capt. Johnson, in command, was primarily responsible through his carelessness. He was through his carelessness. He was going by dead reckoning and he gave it as his arbitrary opinion that the "log was running about 6 per cent. ahead." As a matter of fact, the log was running behind, if anything. In other ways, as the commission shows in detail, his navigation was careless. He log this life in the disaster. He lost his life in the disaster.

Pacific Coast Steamship Company, owning the vessel, is exonerated, as are the Government inspectors. It was proved that the vessel had been regularly inspected, that she had fulfilled all the tests and that when the moment of strain came she lived up to the tests in all but one or two minor particulars. There was no panic either among the passengers or crew, but there among the passengers or crew, but there was considerable stupidity among the officers, and to this is attributed the loss of two or three of the boats.

Regarding the action of the Canadian skippers, the commission expressly refuses to place itself on record, since these two men are citizens of another nation, but it states all the facts. After reviewing the actions of the captains of the Queen and actions of the captains of the Queen and Topeka, American vessels, the commis-

"On this point the commission desires to express no opinion, but is compelled to observe that there was certainly no display of the heroic daring that has often marked other such emergencies in our merchant marine."

Finally it devoted a whole chapter to the things which ought to be done to render that part of the Pacific coast safer. At present it is dangerous and very inade-quately protected. There was not a life saving station within 110 miles of the point where the Valencia struck.

The commission consisted of Lawrence
O. Murray, Assistant Secretary of Commerce and Labor; Capt. William T. Burwell, commandant of the Puget Sound Navy Yard, and Herbert Knox Smith, Deputy Commissioner of Corporations. missioner of Corporations.

MOCK DUCK IS FREE. Tom Lee, Greatly Worried, Says Peace in

Chinatown Is at an End. Mock Duck, the former head of the Hip Sing Tong, was released yesterday from the Tombs, where he has been locked up for three months. His release was the signal for great rejoicing by the Hip Sing men. The On Leong Tong showed great anxiety. Clergyman Awaiting Death and Wishing to Be Cremated Gets an Urn for His Ashes.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., April 14.-Afflicted with cancer of the face and hourly expecting death the Rev. Charles M. Winchester, a clergyman, widely known throughout this State, Rhode Island and Massachusetts, sits in a pleasant room at his home in this city making plans for the disposal of his remains. He has for some time been making ready for his departure and has left strict injunctions that his body shall be cremated. He talks freely with friends about his death, and one of them, Charles H. George of Providence, R. I., a boyhood friend, has sent him a handsome and costly urn of copper, in which his ashes will rest. The urn is of classic design, with handles of hammered antique bronze. Inside is a brass receptable, holding perhaps two quarts. The Rev. Mr. Winchester has had the following inscription engraved on the urn: remains. He has for some time been mak-

HE COUGHED UP WOOL.

Then the Lump in Von Glahn's Groin Disappeared and He Got Better.

Dr. Charles H. Ball of 1010 Garden street, Hoboken, said last evening that a patient who came to him for treatment for a lump in his groin got over his trouble after coughing up bunches of red flannel fuzz for two days. The young man who coughed up the woollen goods was George von Glahn, an employee at the Hoboken paper mill, in Eighth street. Von Glahn was greatly alarmed when he discovered that the lump was movable and consulted the physician. The dootor discovered incidentally that he had broughtal trouble and gave him some he had bronchial trouble and gave him some medicine. The patient was seized later with a coughing fit and raised bunches of the woollen stuff in large quantities. He kept at it off and on for two days and then felt better. He is now getting well.

Dr. Ball said he was not prepared to say whether all the fuzz came from the lungs or stomach. He declared he never saw a case like it before and is keeping samples of the woollen stuff as a curiosity. When asked what relation the lump in the groin had to the macerated red flannel he replied:

plied:
"I really do not know, but I do know that it disappeared after Von Glahn coughed

Von Glahn says he inhaled flying particles of fuzz in the paper mill and the stuff formed into little woolly balls somewhere

Yesterday in Columbus. COLUMBUS, Ohio, April 14.-This was charity day in Columbus. Early this morning prominent society women and girls took up their stations on street corners and in all big buildings, banks, stores, hotels, restaurants and railway stations. If you were good you got flowers in return for your contribution.

You could not dodge 'em if you ventured out on the street or let your appetite run you toward a lunch counter or a dining room. If you tried to leave town they nailed you as you bought your ticket. By noon, after only five hours work, they had collected over $5,000. One young society woman took a dare to invade a barber shop at the Chittenden Hotel. Another could not be bluffed when the proprietor of a café sent word that he had $5, but they would have to come after it. She got a would have to come after it. She got a bunch of fives.

G. B. SHAW SUING PUBLISHERS

HE WANTS HIS AMERICAN COPY-RIGHTS AND $25,000.

George Bernard Shaw has begun a suit in the Supreme Court to recover from Melville E. Stone, Jr., and Herbert S. Stone Melville E. Stone, Jr., and Herbert S. Stone $25,000 damages for alleged wrongful detention of the copyrights on "Plays Pleasant and Unpleasant," "Three Plays for Puritans" and certain others of his books. Shaw also wants an accounting of the royalties on his books.

Shaw says in his complaint that on December 5, 1897, he granted to Grant Richards a five years license for the publication in this country of the two volumes of "Plays Pleasant and Unpleasant." These volumes included "Candida," "You Never Can Tell," "Philanderer," "Mrs. Warren's Profession," "Arms and the Man," and "Widowers' Houses."

to get a royalty of 23½ cents on every copy sold, and the books were to be copyrighted in his favor.

By Shaw's consent, Richards transferred the license to Stone & Co. on November 2, 1898, and Stone & Co. took out copyrights on the books. These copyrights, he says, have never been transferred to him. He values the copyrights at many thousands of dollars, and alleges that Stone & Co. have wrongfully transferred them to Fox, Duffield & Co., who succeeded to a large part of Stone & Co.'s business.

The five years license expired three years ago, Shaw says, and therefore neither Stone & Co. nor Fox, Duffield & Co. should be permitted to print or publish "Plays Pleasant and Unpleasant."

Shaw makes practically the same allegations in relation to other volumes of his plays, including "Three Plays for Puritans," "The Devil's Disciple," "Cesar and Cleopatra" and "Captain Brassbound's Conversion." The other volumes included "The Perfect Wagnerite" and "Cashel Byron's Profession." The copyrights on these works have also been wrongfully withheld from him, Shaw says, although he has demanded them.

He declares that Stone & Co.'s action in He declares that Stone & Co.'s action in assigning the copyrights to Fox, Duffield & Co. was fraudulent and wrongful. He also asks for an accounting of the royalties on his books, saying that the statements of royalties rendered him were incomplete and vague and that thousands of dollars are still due him from this source. Every day that he is deprived of his copyrights is worth $200 to him, he says, in addition to the $25,000 damages which he demands.

His counsel, Sackett, McQuaid & Stevens, have applied to the court for an order permitting Fox, Duffield & Co. to be joined as mitting for, Dumeia & Co. to be joined as party defendants, and for an injunction restraining them or Stone & Co. from continuing the publication of his works or transferring the copyrights to other persons.

JAMES A. BAILEY'S FUNERAL. The Most Prominent Showmen in the Country Present-Many Floral Pieces. MOUNT VERNON, N. Y., April 14.-James . Bailey, the circus king, was buried to-day after services at his home, The Knolls, Corcoran Manor, Mount Vernon. The flags on the City Hall were at half mast. The services were at 2:30 o'clock. There were no eulogies or remarks except that the clergyman, the Rev. H. H. Beattys of the Chester Hill Methodist Church, referred in his prayer to the exemplary life led by the great showman and the many hearts he had gladdened in his long career by his deeds of charity.

The funeral was attended by the executive staff of the Barnum and Bailey show and about one hundred personal friends. Prominent among the showmen present were Gill Robinson, representing the John Robinson Circus; W. W. Cole, once a partner of Mr. Bailey; George Middleton of St. Louis, and Alfred Lee a former partner; John and Alfred Mr. Bailey; George Middleton of St. Louis, also a former partner; John and Alfred Ringling, now at the head of the Forepaugh & Sells Brothers show; Mrs. Gill Robinson of Cincinnati, whose mother, Mme. Lake, once employed Mr. Bailey as advance agent of her show; William Lusbaugh of Covington, Ky., who manufactures the big tents for the show; Charles N. Schroeder, manager, and Thomas J. Reynolds, general superintendent of Madison Square Garden; A. A. Stewart and Louis E. Cook, for nineteen years advance manager for Barnum and Bailey.

There is much speculation regarding the future head of the circus, but one of the men who has been close to Mr. Bailey for years said that no choice would probably be made until George O. Starr, who is now returning from Europe, arrives in this country. Upon his arrival it is said that a meeting of the directors will be held for the purpose of electing Mr. Bailey's successor.

Mr. and Mrs. Daniel O'Day will celebrate Easter Sunday by giving a bridal dinner to-night at their home, 128 West Seventysecond street, for their daughter, Miss Florence C'Day, and her fiancé, John William Hallahan of Philadelphia. Mr. O'Day has fourteen children and some grand-children. His splendid country establishment on Deal Lake has suites of rooms for every member of the family, and there is an outside cottage exclusively for domestics. It is considered quite a sight to see Mr. O'Day at the door of his omnibus piling in children and their friends.

Told by a Velvet Cuffed German Applicant

"I came to America," said the German, "because I want to make money enough to go back home and marry the girl for whose sake I gave up my family. My father went to St. Petersburg thirty-four years ago and became Chancellor of the University of St. Petersburg. I was educated in Germany. My father's home is near Bremen, and from the local gymnasium I went to the School of Commerce in Cologne. Then I served a long apprentice-ship in a German banking house. After I had finished my training I went home for a while in St. Petersburg, he went of he was naturally curious to see what we going on. That was in the days when father Gapon was leading the revolu-tionists. His father warned him to stay indoors, but one day the young German and his brother went out to see the ex-citement. There was a great crowd in the Nevsky Prospekt and thither the two went. soldiers ordered the mob to disperse The crowd refused to budge. Then the Cossacks charged and the brother was Upheld in Part by Magistrate. Magistrate Wahle sat in the West Side court yesterday afternoon long enough to give a decision as to the right of public hackmen to invade a stand for which private hackmen had paid a special license to the city. Martin Frawley, who, in addition to paying the public hackman's fee of $10, paid $25 for the privilege of standing two paid $25 for the printeger of the hacks in front of Jack's restaurant, on Sixth avenue, caused the arrest of John Dailey, a public hackman, who stationed a coach there too.

The Magistrate ruled that the Board of
